

Bank CEOs are crying crocodile tears

Summary:

Bank CEOs will very happily pay this minuscule bank levy .... it it stop a Royal Commission. This article shows how the elite are working against your interests. Lies and threats to scare people. What do you expect bank from CEOs, ratings agencies and market analysts to say? It certainly won't be the truth. The elite want us distracted, confused and frightened. Arguing about Labor or Liberal and this tax or that tax is keeping you right out of the real game. There is an important discussion that needs to be had but it won't happen while you are battling a phony fight in the wrong arena.

Article Information Category: Banking News

Banking Company: Banks in General

Bank Malpractice Type: Powermongering & Greed

Author: Stuart Condie, Dan McCulloch and Jennifer Rajca

Source: AAP

Date First Published: 12 May 2017

Posted By Peter Brandson
12 May 2017 - 4:03pm

Bank levy could spark a property market crash, analysts warn

The new bank levy has opened a Pandora's box that leaves Australia's biggest financial institutions exposed to a potential disaster, analysts warn.

In a note to investors, UBS says the levy could pose a risk to what it sees as a housing bubble, threatening the stability of an economy reliant upon the $6 trillion property market.

Ratings agency Moody's estimates the levy introduced in this week's federal Budget will reduce the big banks' pre-tax profit by about 3.8 per cent, and UBS analyst Jonathan Mott said future hikes of the levy are a real possibility.

"Pandora's box has been opened," Mr Mott wrote in the investor note, pointing out that the UK bank levy was hiked nine times.

"Future governments could also raise the bank levy as an easy source of revenue to fund spending, tax cuts or the deficit, especially as none of the political parties oppose this policy."

'BANKING SECTOR IS CRUCIAL'

The chief executives of ANZ, Commonwealth Bank, National Australia Bank and Westpac have all said the cost of the bank levy will be passed on to shareholders, staff and, through higher interest rates, customers.

Mr Mott said the government could raise the levy from its July 1 rate of 0.06 per cent of banks' liabilities as punishment for hiking rates.

He noted that the UK government had lifted an equivalent levy on that country's banks on nine occasions.

NAB chief executive Andrew Thorburn said the levy represented a threat to the health of the industry and the broader economy.

"I'm surprised to see it from any government, to be honest, because the banking sector is so crucial to the strength and viability, and the growth of our economy," Mr Thorburn told Melbourne radio 3AW on Thursday.

LAST-MINUTE 'SMASH AND GRAB'

Australian Bankers Association chief Anna Bligh said there the policy was rushed into the budget at the last minute as a "smash-and-grab" for more revenue.

"It seems not only were banks kept in the dark on this tax, but perhaps Treasury officials had been kept in the dark up until now," she said.

"This is a government now playing fast and loose with Australia's financial system and this is a dangerous place for us all to be."

Ms Bligh said the biggest shareholders of Australian banks were superannuation funds.

"They are hundreds of thousands of individual Australian shareholders — many of whom are retirees — who are living on share dividends as a result of their retirement," she said.

"If you are a working Australian and you have a superannuation account, then you own shares in one of the major banks, and the treasurer is saying this tax should be passed on to your investments."

HOME BUYERS UNDER PRESSURE

---

The big banks have already repriced their mortgage books, in particular to make interest-only and investor loans more expensive to comply with Australian Prudential Regulation Authority limits on riskier lending.

More rises could have deleterious effects on the housing market and wider economy, Mr Mott said.

"If the banks reprice their mortgage books this would put further pressure on household cash flows which are already suffering from near record low income growth, higher mortgage payments and higher power bills," Mr Mott said.

"While the implication on the 'animal spirits' in the housing market is difficult to predict, we see substantial risk to the Australian Housing Bubble."

Moody's said the government's announcement of additional regulation of the sector further reduced the threat of a royal commission into the sector.

But that offered little relief to ANZ, CBA, NAB, Westpac and Macquarie Group, the fifth bank affected by the change.

"We struggle to see the upside case in owning the banks in the current environment," Mr Mott said.

'TIME TO SWITCH BANKS'

Meanwhile, Prime Minister Malcolm Turnbull has issued Australians the kind of advice we're used to hearing from consumer group Choice.

Mr Turnbull said on Friday that customers should vote with their feet by switching banks if the big four follow through on their rake hike threats.

"If people feel that Westpac or the Commonwealth Bank is charging them too much, they can take their business somewhere else," Mr Turnbull told the Seven Network, advising people to switch to smaller lenders like Suncorp and Bendigo Bank.

Asked what would happen if all customers took their business to credit unions or smaller institutions, he replied: "You shouldn't run up the white flag and surrender to the banks. They are the most profitable banks in the world."

Mr Turnbull said the consumer and competition watchdog would be monitoring the banks to ensure a more competitive environment.

'POLICY ON THE RUN'

Commonwealth Bank chief executive Ian Narev described the levy as policy concocted "on the run".

He says the banking giants have more questions than answers following a showdown with Treasury officials in Sydney on Thursday.

"This will test well in the opinion polls," he predicted on ABC radio. "The question we should be asking as the public is, if a government is going to judge its success as an economic budget on the next day's opinion polls, is that the kind of economic policy we want."

Finance Minister Mathias Cormann said the banks received a straightforward explanation on the levy and there was nothing complicated about its details.

"Don't believe everything that someone who doesn't want to pay more tax is telling you," Mr Cormann said.

---

Ms Bligh has called on the Senate to carefully scrutinise the proposed law underpinning the tax, potentially delaying its July 1 introduction.

Elsewhere, several crossbench senators have joined calls for an investigation into how the budget's controversial bank levy was leaked to the media, leading to a $14 billion wipe-out of bank shares.

---

BRN Comments: Can you handle the truth? Here is is. The financial system and the government that serves it is taking far too much money out of our economy and our pockets. The new Bank Levy could very easily be passed onto customers one way or another by dodgy bank CEOs. The government doesn't really care. In reality the levy / tax should come from shareholders profits and CEO pay packets. The industry is profiting from organised crime (a taste showing just how bad it is can be found in the video below - All the Plenary's Men).

Reform will lead to lower bank profits and dividends. Just like genuine reforms would lead lower house prices. We have to suck it up if you want the pay off .... a better society where we can live in civilised freedom.

Honest banking is not that profitable. Genuine structural reform would see a sovereign monetary system created. That would take the power and wealth generated by credit creation away from the bankers and return it to the people as mandated by our constitutional democracy. Taxes would be lower, work time could be reduced and you and your family will enjoy easier access to valuable resources like health, education and infrastructure.

The standard of living would improve for the vast majority of us.

This is not a fantasy. We just have to realise that by buying into the crap that we are fed every day we limit our perception of what is possible. The elite want us distracted, confused and frightened. Arguing about Labor or Liberal and this tax or that tax is keeping you right out of the real game. There is an important discussion that needs to be had but it won't happen while you are battling a phony fight in the wrong arena.

Our current debt based system of servitude can be changed .... but only if you work toward it. Support BRN and we won't let you down - you can help us by donating (link below). Let's ramp up the campaign at this critical time.

Websites For More Information: SOURCE: Bank levy could spark a property market crash, analysts warn

<http://www.news.com.au/finance/business/banking/bank-levy-could-spark-a-property-market-crash-analysts-warn/news-story/b8a288fddc1d1b85f37a13039bfb049a>

All the Plenary's Men

<https://www.youtube.com/watch>

Related Links: Donate To Bank Reform Now

Source URL (modified on 12 May 2017 - 7:55pm):

<https://www.bankreformnow.com.au/node/349>